WELCOME STRANGER!

Tomorrow, July 25, Dr. R.L. Henderson, educational pro in charge of many courses at Eastern, will ease through his final round of play at Emory University's annual open for elementary school principals and will be sailing home.

Efforts are being made to ascertain the date of his arrival in Billings, since as in the case of Ben Hogan and his arrival in New York, the champ will be paraded up Billings' Broadway and showered with red tap and shredded copies of the Yellow Jacket.

Informed by wire of the proposed rousing welcome, the open champion replied, in real Southern style, "Well, shut my mouth!"

PERFECT PARALLEL

The response to repeated appeals broadcast by Dr. Alterowitz for faculty-graduate free dinners on Aug. 5 recalls the offer of the Nye Dairy during the depression. Anybody, said Nyes, could have free milk if he or she would come for it. Some were anxious to have it, but they called up Nyes and requested that it be delivered.

PANELS AND PANS

Dick Boggio will preside over a panel-discussion Tuesday at 8 p.m. in the student lounge. At first glance, we read the title as "Me and You." Second glance: MEA and You.

Thursday night is the big steak fry on the north campus. Tantalizing Texas T-bones with seconds, maybe thirds. Let out a little slack in your slacks. Those wishing onions will bring their own, and form a group just south of the incinerator.

LOST AND FOUND

Found: set of car keys and fountain pen. Can be recovered at Bookstore. If not reclaimed within two weeks, will use the car keys to take a trip and the fountain pen to write home about.

NOBLE EXPERIMENT

As we go to press, hundreds are gathering on the front lawn to see what they can do to lessen the water-shortage problem in Billings.

The management has provided 500 pounds of delicious, dripping Indiana watermelons and expects every Easterner to do his duty. At the contest's close, nobody is expected to need a drink of water for 8 days or more. J.F. McGuire has consented to give an unusual demonstration of a man biting a rattlesnake---melon, that is.

By George, You're Right!

Student at picnic: "Is this tea or coffee? It tastes like kerosene."

Shorty: "If it tastes like kerosene, it's definitely tea. Our coffee tastes like turpentine."

AMONG PEOPLE YOU SHOULD KNOW

Mrs. Joyce Church, for the last 6 years "righthand man" to Art E. Soulsby in the guidance office, is a native of North Dakota. Before becoming a private secretary she worked for the government, training people in NYA and Personnel office work in Naval Reserve in South Carolina. Came here from California, where she was with a commercial concern. Son is graduate of NDAC at Fargo; son-in-law public welfare county supervisor at Anaconda. Nobody would ever think of greeting her as "grandma" but she can prove it---twice, if necessary.
