THE SANDMAN STORY

MR. FOX AND MR. DOG

MR. FOX was feeling very forlorn and sad. He was thinking about the winter and how hard it would be to get a good meal with the snow on the ground, and the ever watchful Mr. Dog at the farm on the hill.

"Now why in the world does he not sleep all winter like Mr. Bear?" thought Mr. Fox, and then he jumped up, slapped his sides and began to laugh. "He might," he said. "He might! Mr. Dog is always ready enough to listen if you approach him in the right way."

Mr. Fox sat down again and was lost in thought for some time. Then he ran out of the house straight toward the farm on the hill, and when he came to a rock which was on the other side of the fence from Mr. Dog's house he jumped on it and sat down. Pretty soon along came Mr. Dog, jumping about and playing in the snow.

"Mr. Dog Jumping About and Playing in the Snow."

Mr. Fox jumped down and by the time Mr. Dog came up to him he was rolling over and playing just as Mr. Dog was doing.

"Growl," went Mr. Dog, starting toward Mr. Fox, but Mr. Fox was not to be scared. He just jumped at Mr. Dog as if to tag him and then ran toward the woods and Mr. Dog after him.

When they reached the woods Mr. Fox turned around and began to dance about again and Mr. Dog forgot his duty to his master and began to play just as Mr. Fox intended he should.

By and by Mr. Fox sat down. "It is going to be a long winter, I think, and I believe I shall try Mr. Bear's plan," he said, "and go to sleep and not wake up till springtime."

"Why don't you do the same, Mr. Dog?" he asked. "It must be pretty dull for you around the farm. And then I should think you would want to get away from Mr. Man for a while. I fancy he is not so considerate of you in the winter time as he might be. "It is a shame to make you sleep out in that house, where it must be very cold, when he could just as well let you sleep in the kitchen behind the stove, where it is nice and warm."

This was a very unpleasant subject to Mr. Dog, for he had often thought the same thing about the kitchen stove and tried many times to hide and get a chance to sleep there. But every time his master had found him and made him go out in his house to spend the night.

"Where could I find a nice place to sleep all winter?" he inquired. "I guess waster will wish he had let me sleep in the kitchen when he finds I am gone."

Mr. Fox began to smile. He was thinking how easily it would be for him to get poultry all winter with Mr. Dog stored away somewhere asleep until spring.

"You come with me, Mr. Dog," he said. "I will show you a place where you will be comfortable, for I do think your master is most unfair to you and I should like to help you."

Mr. Fox had noticed a place among some rocks that very morning where he was certain there must be a cave-like place, and here he led Mr. Dog.

"There," he said when they reached it, "you crawl in there. You will find dried leaves and other soft things and when the next snow comes it will cover these rocks and no one will ever find you, and when you go home in the spring I guess Mr. Man will be pretty glad to see you."

Then off ran Mr. Fox for his home. But what he did not know was that he had taken Mr. Dog to the very place Mr. Porcupine had chosen for his winter bedroom and when Mr. Dog crawled into the cave he came up against Mr. Porcupine's quills. For he always sleeps with his back to the opening of his cave.

Mr. Dog ran ki-yi-ing for home, and that night when Mr. Fox ran carelessly

The Why of Superstitions

By H. IRVING KING

GOLD BEADS AND SORE THROATS

A STRING of gold beads when worn around the neck is regarded in this country and Canada sometimes as a cure for sore throat, quinsy and scrofula; but generally as a preventive of those diseases. Once universal, this superstition now flourishes mostly in the rural districts where it shows no sign of losing its ground. Apparently the source of the superstition is to be found in the cult of Minerva, the Roman goddess identified with the Greek Athena.

Now Athena-Minerva wore, among her other ornaments, the Aegis of her father Zeus, or Jupiter. Ancient statues of Athena-Minerva represent her as wearing the Aegis in different forms and ways. In several of the statues which have been dug up—notably one in the gallery of the Louvre—the Aegis is nothing more than a broad collar or necklace to which is attached by way of a pendant the Gorgon's head

"What's in a Name?"

By MILDRED MARSHALL

FACTS about your name; its history; meaning; whence it was derived; significance; your lucky day and lucky jewel

PATIENCE

THE quaint old-fashioned name of Patience has a doubly worthy significance. Not only does it represent an abstract virtue which religion deems all-desirable, but it is also one of the names of holiness. It means "bearing up" and is regarded entirely as an English name though its origin is with the Latin.

The title, Plus, applied first to faithful filial love as in the "Aeneid," came to have a higher significance with the advent of Christianity. Under Antonius Plus it became the name of a martyr pope and later was used most frequently as one of the papal

Margaret Fielding

Handsome Margaret Fielding, the "movie" star, is well known because of her excellent work in one of the popular pictures recently featured. She was educated in a convent at Madison, N. J. She began her stage work with a stock company, and after two years' experience took up ingenue roles in pictures, later being given leading parts.

Into the barnyard he found a very angry and savage Mr. Dog waiting for him.

Mr. Fox's ear was nipped but he managed to get away. "Now, how could he treat me in such an unkind manner?" mused Mr. Fox when he reached home. "Even if he did not care to sleep all winter he ought to remember that I acted in a very friendly way toward him."

But Mr. Dog of course thought Mr. Fox had taken him to the cave knowing just what was to happen to him and he slept with one eye open and both ears listening all winter, and Mr. Fox did have a very hard winter, very hard indeed.

on a medallion, falling on the goddess' bosom.

The carving of the Aegis seem to represent it as of wrought metal—presumably gold. The Greeks, we know, painted their statues and sometimes gilded parts of them. The celebrated statue of Athena by Phidias in the Parthenon was of ivory and gold and the Aegis on it would naturally be of the metal. If the maidens who waited upon the goddess in the Parthenon approached the statue wearing a gold ornament that ornament became sacred. It would have been natural for them to have adorned themselves in the manner of their goddess and their golden necklaces would have become thereby sanctified.

As to medicinal powers the festival of Minerva at Rome was especially celebrated by physicians and in one of her phases the goddess was known as Athena Medica—Athena the physician—and temples were erected to her under that name. Hence the significance of the symbol of the Aegis of Athena—a necklace of gold beads. Especially do we see this in the idea of the preventive power of the symbol, for though the Aegis degenerated into a necklace it was, undoubtedly, originally a shield—something that protected.

That's Different.

"Yes, sir," bragged the artist, "I value this painting of mine at $10,000."

"I thank you for your frankness," responded the stranger. "I am the tax assessor."

"At $10,000 from an artist's standpoint" went on the artist without a break. "Of course you know, however, that a painting is actually what the materials cost. In this case that would be $2 for canvas, and for paints, say 60 cents, or $2.60 in all."—Houston Post.

PLANE STEERED BY RADIO

Machine Guided Two Hundred and Fifty Miles During Experiment in France.

A number of experiments have been made with radio-controlled vessels and airplanes, but one of the most successful trials was that recently held in France, when a plane was driven 250 miles and steered the entire trip by radio. The indications were received on an apparatus called the radio goniometer, which showed the airplane's position with relation to the wireless station. This device enabled the pilot to make the journey with an error of only 2 per cent in direction on the outward flight and with entire accuracy on the return.

One advantage of the apparatus, if practicable, says the Los Angeles Times, is the assistance it would lend to night flying, a branch of aviation that is receiving much attention just now. The mail service of the United States intends starting a schedule for night-flying planes and hopes to speed up the service to San Francisco by night travel.

EXECUTED FOR USING COAL

Under Edict Issued by Edward I of England This Was Capital Offense.

In 1306 King Edward I of England issued a proclamation making the use of coal as fuel in London a capital offense. One case is on record where an accused man was tried, found guilty of burning coal, condemned and promptly executed.

The invisible, gaseous products of the combustion of coal were early pronounced detrimental to health and vegetation. Resentment became intense when ladies of rank, their faces made fuller by liberal applications of powder, underwent a curious change of complexion whenever they sat near a coal fire.

The nature of the smoke and odor from burning coal remained a mystery until after the middle of the Seventeenth century, when an alchemist devised an ingenious process of heating coal in the absence of air. The liquor obtained was known as "oil of coal" and was sold as a most potent remedy for many ailments.—Detroit News.
